This seems like a really cool project and I am very happy that there are people working on projects like this for people with learning disabilities. I think that a working environment to help people learn in such a way is a very novel idea. Also, the video features how this idea might be applied very clearly.

I would say that this approach , or at least some of the lessons learned, could be applied quite universally to solving other problems. In particular, problems that involve human interaction, or helping humans do jobs. Cool project!
